Center Columns Reaches Outposts In Face Of Bitter Resistance

SARAGOSSA, Spain, Jan. 20—The imminent fall of Barcelona was indicated today in an official statement by insurgent headquarters here. Stating that the "liberation" of the Catalan capital could soon be expected, the announcement asked all provincial authorities to rush truckloads of foodstuffs for relief of the city's population.

LERIDA, Spain, Jan. 20—Smashing ahead through desperate government resistance, the central column of General Francisco Franco's steadily advancing insurgent armies today reached the outer edge of defenses of Barcelona, according to an insurgent communiqué.

Insurgent General Garcia Valino's army at midday today captured Calaf, a vital communications center northwest of Igualada, and thereby faced the first line of "last ditch" defenses of the government capital.

The fall of Calaf, an important junction on the railroad line between Lerida and Barcelona, was said to give the central insurgent column command of the Noya valley leading to Igualada.

As General Valino pushed forward north of the main highway from Cervera to Barcelona, the insurgent armies began to close on Igualada, key stronghold of the government defenses little more than thirty miles from the suburbs of the Catalonia metropolis.

Insurgent authorities at Lerida said the battle for possession of Igualada is continuing, but that insurgent planes which have been bombing government positions there have returned to their bases, leaving to the artillery units the (Continued on Page Eight)

Walther Funk Becomes New Reichsbank Chief In Drastic Move

AMERICANS ARE PUZZLED

Confusion Prevails After Action; Rublee And Aides In Quandary

BERLIN, Jan. 20—Throwing negotiations over the fate of Jewish and other refugees into a state of confusion, Chancellor Hitler today relieved Dr. Hjalmar Schacht from his post as president of the Reichsbank.

Economics Minister Walther Funk was named Reichsbank head as Schacht's successor, while Schacht will remain a member of Hitler's cabinet.

According to the order issued by the Fuehrer, Schacht will be reserved for special assignments. It was announced that the presidency of the Reichsbank and the ministry of economics will now be united under Funk, whose appointment is limited to a four-year term.

The shift was described as the result of the necessity to coordinate the ministry of economics and the Reichsbank.

Negotiators Surprised

George Rublee, American director of the inter-governmental committee on refugees, and his colleagues, Joseph Cotton and Robert T. Pell, who have been negotiating with Schacht on the refugee problem, were surprised by the sudden shift.

Rublee was scheduled to meet Schacht this morning. He is now awaiting further advice.

The three American negotiators were temporarily thrown into a quandary by Schacht's withdrawal from the Reichsbank, a development which left them unaware whether their past negotiations with him would continue.

They also did not know whether Schacht's authority to conduct the negotiations would continue.

Questioned on this point, a spokesman of the Reichsbank announced: "Members of the Rublee committee will be informed of the situation by the chancellery."

Meanwhile, Rublee, Cotton and Pell went into conference among themselves after their scheduled meeting with Schacht appeared (Continued on Page Eight)

37 SAVED FROM SEA AS WAVES WRECK TANKER

Norwegian Ship Breaks In Half During Atlantic Ocean Storm

NEW YORK, Jan. 20—Miraculously rescued when their tanker was broken in twain by mountainous waves on the storm-tossed north Atlantic, 37 members of the crew of the 9,827 ton Norwegian oil tanker, the Jaguar, were enroute to London today aboard the rescue ship, the Duala, a tiny freighter.

By some fortunate circumstance, the Duala apparently was not far away from the Jaguar, bearing oil from Mexico to Europe when it was broken in two in mid-Atlantic. After a night of terror, a life boat crew from the Duala rescued seven men from the bobbing forepart of the ship and thirty clinging to the after part.

Winds of 70 miles or more an hour speed lashed the mighty Atlantic into an unmanageable fury that periled all shipping.

The Italian liner, Vulcanta, docked in New York with two passengers injured, windows broken and dramatic tales of the battle waged against the sea.

Gag That Turned Into Riches

THAT $10,000 "fake" treasury note gag of Mrs. Myra Wallace, wife of a music publisher, played on Shep Fields, the orchestra leader, in Los Angeles, ends happily for the two as they depart from the federal building with a receipt for $10,000. Mrs. Wallace had given Fields the note, which she found on a New York street, as a gag. Fields thought it was counterfeit, too, but made sure by taking it to the treasury. Officials said the note had long been sought by government agents after it was thrown out of a federal building in Washington in 1934 by a fireman during a fire.

Snow-Packed Roads Make Auto Traffic Hazardous

Circleville and Pickaway county residents took another lesson on skids and slides, Thursday night, without any serious mishaps reported.

A light snow packed on streets, highways and sidewalks making driving and walking hazardous. Drivers were cautious. More snow was predicted for Friday.

Employees of the highway department and the city service department worked late Thursday night sanding grades and intersections. Thursday's high temperature was 38 degrees. During the night the temperature dropped to 26 degrees.

Charles Krimmel, Jackson township, escaped without injury about 5 p. m. Thursday when the car he was driving skidded and left the road from Fox to Route 56. The car, owned by Miss Bertha Krimmel, his sister, was brought to Circleville for repairs.

Louis Gire Huntington pike, Ross county, suffered abrasions on the left leg Thursday evening when he was struck by an auto driven by Gilbert Harmount, Williamsport. The mishap occurred on High street near Arch street in Chillicothe.

An auto driven by Adolph Stelhorn, Ashville Route 1, was involved in a three car collision Wednesday on Route 35, two miles south of Richmondale.

Five Millions To Be Used For Dredging Harbor, Other Improvements

ISLAND IS VITAL POINT

Flying Field And Barracks To Be Provided In Major Project

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20—President Roosevelt today approved the navy's plans to spend $5,000,000 dredging the harbor of Guam and making other military improvements.

The executive indicated that the congressional authorization of this amount was being made without any thought of negotiations with Japan, although it was recalled to him at his press conference that an earlier move to make a big naval base of Guam resulted in the calling of the 1922 arms conference.

Mr. Roosevelt made a careful distinction between congressional authorizations and appropriations, pointing out that the measure now being considered merely authorized but did not appropriate for the arming of the tiny but vital Pacific island.

Insofar as the report of the special navy board, headed by Admiral Arthur Heppburn, proposing a long range fortification of Pacific outposts, was concerned, the President said that he was not taking sides or bothering himself about the long-range proposals. He is considering only the $40,000,000 or more which will actually be needed to start certain phases of the program.

41 Bases Provided

The Heppburn report envisions ultimate establishment of 41 naval bases at a cost of between $500,000,000 and $600,000,000.

Mr. Roosevelt told his press conference that it would be doing a great service to the American people if it would make clear the difference between authorizations and appropriations.

He recalled that back in 1916 a tremendous naval building program was authorized, but never actually carried to completion because the World War ended and there was no disposition to build more fighting ships.

The President smilingly defined an authorization as an expression of a pious hope—a New Year's resolution, which is sometimes lived up to.

Early in the last century, congress formed the habit of passing authorizations for future projects, hoping and supposing that some future congress actually would appropriate the money, the executive continued. He emphasized the fact, however, that one congress cannot commit another.

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 20—Comedian Jack Haley's conscience hurt him because he drove to fast in Hollywood, it was revealed today. So, he sent a check for $10 to traffic court and told Judge Byron Walters to regard it as a "conscience traffic fine."

Haley said in his letter that he narrowly avoided a "fender scramble" with another car in which a woman and baby were riding and it gave his conscience a twinge.

PETTENGILL

"The Gentleman from Indiana"

GAMBLING WITH THE PEOPLE'S TREASURE

I saw and heard the President read his message to Congress. Had there been three messages, we could better focus attention on each. In some particulars, especially his defense of our Bill of Rights, what the President said must appeal to every American. I believe, too, that all of us agree with him that the time has come to shift legislative emphasis from reform to recovery.

The third part of his message told of what appears to be a complete abandonment of sound fiscal policy. No one could get the full significance of this over the radio or by reading the text. One had to be present in the House at the time and feel it sink in.

PETTENGILL The last pretense of living within our income is gone. No only has the President forewarned the faith he expressed so many times in the past, but he now attacks those who would now do what he then urged. Worse than that, he deftly mobilized all pressure groups against Congress. Armament, social security, and socialized medicine—one by one he called the roll of beneficiaries of federal spending and with subtle sarcasm asked Congress which hot potato it cared to pick up. As his faithful lieutenant, Senator Schwellenbach, said he put Congress "behind the eight ball on the matter of further spending."

Having called the roll, the President now says that Congress "alone has the power" to balance outgo against income. He washed his hands of further responsibility. As he spoke these words I could sense what was going through every member's mind—that all these pressure groups knew that the President would be their ally against any Congressman who would undertake to protect the taxpayer against the "gimmies."

Gone are his ringing words "government costs too much. . . . I propose . . . to discuss . . . at all seasons and at all times the duty of reducing taxes . . . for three long years (1933) the Federal government has been on the road toward bankruptcy. . . . too often liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy. . . . let us have courage to stop borrowing to meet continuing deficits. Stop the deficits."

Was the President right when he made these warnings? If he was right then, he is wrong now. And his present abandonment of a once correct position must impress millions of our people as ominous in the extreme. Once he uttered brave words. They are still brave words. Are they nothing but words? Once they thrilled me, and I went down the line for them. I would go down the line again, if our President would repeat them—and mean them.

In the ninth consecutive year of deficits the federal budget is now completely out of control. We are passing the buck to our children at the rate of $6000 a minute, $360,000 an hour, $8,700,000 a day. For the tenth year Mr. Roosevelt estimates we will borrow another $3,000,000,000 with an estimated debt on June 30, 1940 of $44,458,000,000. In addition, as Senator Byrd points out, there is another $8,000,000,000 of obligations issued by 30 federal agencies not disclosed in the regular budget but guaranteed nevertheless by the government—a sort of McKesson-Robbins unaudited drug account. All told, our obligations a year from this Summer will be around $52,000,000,000—if we are not in a war—and we will then start the eleventh and twelfth year of deficits!

Is it too much to ask whether the greatest nation on earth is to go the way of France? Is the working capital of American industry, the savings of our people, to be wiped out by a gamble on some lucky turn which no one has any right to assume will occur? The gamble that the President asks us to take is that somehow, sometime, national income will go up; that national expenditures will not increase and so somehow, sometime, the budget will be balanced. This is the greatest risk America has ever been asked to take. What of the next emergency? It was the one thing to start the last war owing a single billion from such items as digging the Panama Canal. It would be entirely different to fight another war starting with a debt of over $52,000,000,000. Talk about national defeat! We are using up our priceless reserves of war credit without a war at the rate of $6,000 a minute. And now we have not only a complete abandonment of resistance to spend our way down the "road toward bankruptcy" but direct pressure from the President up Congress to continue down that road.

Hard working, frugal people have put by $45,000,000,000 in savings deposits to protect themselves against hazards of sickness unemployment, death. What do these people think of spending with all brakes gone? Some 67,000,000 persons carry life insurance. Will they now remain silent while their security for dependents and for old age is put to the hazards of public officials whose once solemn promises are now nothing but words? And business men with bank balances and working capital as reserves to meet weekly payrolls—are they so dumb as not to understand the risks the President now asks us to take? Mr. Roosevelt no longer guards the people's treasure; he gambles with it.

Will the thrifty, hard-working American now tell his Congressman and Senators that he will uphold them if they protect that treasure and punish them if they do not?

Will those who pay their own way and are not helpless wards of government, now organize and tell Congress and the President that he was right once when he said that if taxes are excessive "they are reflected in idle factories and tax sold farms, and in hordes of hungry people seeking jobs in vain?"

PROFIT DISCLOSED IN 1938

N. E. Reichelderfer, Dr. G. D. Phillips, Clark Will Named To Posts

Arthur L. "Dick" Wilder, W. Union street, today had been re-elected to serve in 1939 as president of the Pickaway Country club following a meeting of stockholders at the club this week. Mr. Wilder completed a successful year as president, the annual report made to the stockholders showing a profit for the first time in several years.

Tom O. Gilliland was chosen as vice president succeeding Charles T. Gilmore, and Claude D. Craft was elected again as secretary-treasurer.

N. E. Reichelderfer was added to the board to fill the position of R. D. Musser, whose term expired, and Clark Will and Dr. G. D. Phillips were re-named for new terms. Other members of the board are Mr. Wilder, Mr. Gilliland, John W. Eshelman, Mr. Gilmore, Tom Brunner and Walter Kindler.

The trustees will meet Jan. 30 at which time plans for the Summer season will be discussed. After the organization a lunch was served and a social evening enjoyed, wives of the officers being guests.

GABLE'S WIFE TO SEEK HER DECREE IN NEVADA

HOLLYWOOD, Jan. 20—Clark Gable, filmstar, and the beautiful Carole Lombard will probably be married in April.

They can be married in six weeks, for Gable's estranged wife, Mrs. Ria Gable, left last night for an unannounced destination in Nevada where she plans to take up residence and secure a divorce.

However, neither Gable nor Miss Lombard would comment on when they would be married, but close friends predicted the popular film couple would march to the altar early in April.

Estranged for the last three years from Gable, Mrs. Gable announced that a property settlement had been completed to the satisfaction of each, and through her attorneys, said she would go immediately to Nevada.

Haley said in his letter that he narrowly avoided a "fender scramble" with another car in which a woman and baby were riding and it gave his conscience a twinge.

I saw and heard the President read his message to Congress. Had there been three messages, we could better focus attention on each. I believe, too, that all of us agree with him that the time has come to shift legislative emphasis from reform to recovery.

The third part of his message told of what appears to be a complete abandonment of sound fiscal policy. No one could get the full significance of this over the radio or by reading the text. One had to be present in the House at the time and feel it sink in.

PETTENGILL The last pretense of living within our income is gone. No only has the President forewarned the faith he expressed so many times in the past, but he now attacks those who would now do what he then urged. Worse than that, he deftly mobilized all pressure groups against Congress. Armament, social security, and socialized medicine—one by one he called the roll of beneficiaries of federal spending and with subtle sarcasm asked Congress which hot potato it cared to pick up. As his faithful lieutenant, Senator Schwelbach, said he put Congress "behind the eight ball on the matter of further spending."

Having called the roll, the President now says that Congress "alone has the power" to balance out against income. He washed his hands of further responsibility. As he spoke these words I could sense what was going through every member's mind—that all these pressure groups knew that the President would be their ally against any Congressman who would undertake to protect the taxpayer against the "gimmies."

Gone are his ringing words "government costs too much. . . . I propose . . . to discuss . . . at all seasons and at all times the duty of reducing taxes . . . for three long years (1933) the Federal government has been on the road toward bankruptcy. . . . too often liberal governments have been wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy. . . . let us have courage to stop borrowing to meet continuing deficits. Stop the deficits."

Was the President right when he made these warnings? If he was right then, he is wrong now. And his present abandonment of a once correct position must impress millions of our people as ominous in the extreme. Once he uttered brave words. They are still brave words. Are they nothing but words? Once they thrilled me, and I went down the line for them. I would go down the line again, if our President would repeat them—and mean them.

All told, our obligations a year from this Summer will be around $52,000,000,000—if we are not in a war—and we will then start the eleventh and twelfth year of deficits!

Is it too much to ask whether the greatest nation on earth is to go the way of France? Is the working capital of American industry, the savings of our people, to be wiped out by a gamble on some lucky turn which no one has any right to assume will occur? The gamble that the President asks us to take is that somehow, sometime, national income will go up; that national expenditures will not increase and so somehow, sometime, the budget will be balanced.

This is the greatest risk America has ever been asked to take. What of the next emergency? It was the one thing to start the last war owing a single billion from such items as digging the Panama Canal. It would be entirely different to fight another war starting with a debt of over $52,000,000,000. Talk about national defense! We are using up our priceless reserves of war credit without a war at the rate of $6,000 a minute. Ashville Institute Big Success; Officers Named

By S. D. Fridley
Phone Ashville, 79

Those in charge of this Farm-er's Institute just closed, can well be pleased with the success they had in classing it among the very best ones yet held here. And if ours is a fair sample of the others held throughout the county, we'd say they are all very different from those of fifty years ago. Here, the then Steward's Hall was well filled with a splendid representative bunch of the best farmers of the community to learn how to grow better and more grain and livestock on the farm. And how to feed biddy just the right feed to make her lay more eggs, was one of the major things in line of discussion. All this thing has passed on and out and the programs now are fashioned along entertainment lines, forgetting the farm stuff. It is almost unbelievable of the radical change in present farm life compared with that of the period mentioned above. But maybe it would be a good idea to tell a little something about the institute just closed with the Walnut township show in the auditorium yesterday evening, finishing the job.

Harley Hines and Faye Solt as president and secretary and Walter Berger and Mrs. Roger Hedges as treasurer and hostess had direct charge of program machinery and kept it moving. With music by the local school orchestra, some two dozen members, under direction of Prof. Brobst, invocation by Rev. O. W. Smith and the welcome address of Mayor Fraunfelder and song by South Bloomfield grade school, all were ready to hear what A. B. Graham, program speaker had in store as a beginning talk. He dealt with animal life including the human. And there wasn't a chance for even a tiny nap while he was in action. And we couldn't help but think while listening to him, that many people get the biggest kick from the monkey cage when visiting the zoo. Mr. Graham appeared in three other talks all very interesting. And an item of much interest about this, Mr. Graham, he founded, 37 years ago at Springfield, Ohio, the first 4-H club with a membership of 85 and our Prof. E. F. Martin was one of these members. He was much pleased to meet Mr. Martin here. Also he spent 22 years in Washington in the agricultural extension department. His home is now in Columbus.

Mrs. Ferguson, the lady speaker, when at home is on a farm in Morrow county, near Lexington. Said she is the mother of three children and has been in this institute work for ten years. She is an interesting talker and keeps her audience close with her. Amateur show story appeared in Thursday's Herald.

Thursday morning's session opened with a number by the Walnut township's school orchestra of some twenty members rendering a selection, Miss Roubush, Circleville, directing. Rev. Winterhoff, St. Paul, gave the invocation. The Duvall, Madison, Ashville, and South Bloomfield grade schools all appeared in numbers of the two-day program and performed like veterans. The officials who will see to it that next year's institute is at least as good as the one just held are Lewis Hay, president; Chester Noecker, vice president; Faye Solt, secretary. Executive committee, Mrs. Sam Brinker, Mrs. Herb Cummins, Frank Wharton, Ray Swayer and Cecil Noecker.

The food, grain and potato show was a splendid success with many quality entries, the corn being especially strong. Ervin Yeoman assisted by D. W. Briggs, both of got out her best china for the occasion and the two had chatted for more than an hour judging from the number of cigarettes smoked, according to police.

The absence of any sign that a struggle had taken place indicated, investigators said, that Mrs. Romig had been taken entirely by surprise. The position of the blows, according to the coroner, made it likely they had been struck by a left-handed person, so strong that the handle of the small claw hammer had been shattered.

Mrs. Romig's youthful husband, Harold, 28, said the handkerchief did not belong to his wife and told police he was unable to identify it as belonging to any of her acquaintances.

He was released from custody after proving he had been at work Tuesday afternoon when the killing presumably was committed, in their apartment and said he was unable to furnish any clues to a motive for the attack.

Ashville Institute Big Success; Officers Named

By S. D. Fridley
Phone Ashville, 79

Those in charge of this Farmers' Institute just closed, can well be pleased with the success they had in classing it among the very best ones yet held here. And if ours is a fair sample of the others held throughout the county, we'd say they are all very different than those of fifty years ago. Here, the then Stewart's Hall was well filled with a splendid representative bunch of the best farmers of the community to learn how to grow better and more grain and livestock on the farm. And how to feed biddy just the right feed to make her lay more eggs, was one of the major things in line of discussion. All this thing has passed on and out and the programs now are fashioned along entertainment lines, forgetting the farm stuff. It is almost unbelievable of the radical change in present farm life compared with that of the period mentioned above. But maybe it would be a good idea to tell a little something about the institute just closed with the Walnut township show in the auditorium yesterday evening, finishing the job.

New Holland, placed the corn awards. The officials had not completed the winning lists so they were not obtainable. Complete list tomorrow. The Methodist ladies deserve much credit for the splendid meals they furnished and the manner in which they cared for their patrons. About 600 meals were served. Door prizes were plentiful. A. B. Courtwright did a fine job at auctioning off the prize winning articles.

Among the things the resolutions committee presented, other than thanking everyone for the part they played in making the institute the success it was, were that a home demonstration agent should be appointed; that judges of exhibits be required to show why they place the premiums as they do. Archie Peters, Mrs. Curtis Cromley, Mrs. Walter Berger, Mrs. Jesse Baum, Mrs. Cecil Noecker and Mrs. Stanley Beckett served on this committee.

Thirty young men registered in the short course on milk testing at Ohio State university. The course prepares students for positions as testers in dairy herd improvement associations.

Harley Hines and Faye Solt as president and secretary and Walter Berger and Mrs. Roger Hedges as treasurer and hostess had direct charge of program machinery and kept it moving. With music by the local school orchestra, some two dozen members, under direction of Prof. Brobst, invocation by Rev. O. W. He dealt with animal life including the human. And there wasn't a chance for even a tiny nap while he was in action. And we couldn't help but think while listening to him, that many people get the biggest kick from the monkey cage when visiting the zoo. Mr. Graham appeared in three other talks all very interesting. And an item of much interest about this. Mr. Graham, he founded, 37 years ago at Springfield, Ohio, the first 4-H club with a membership of 85 and our Prof. E. F. Martin was one of these members. He was much pleased to meet Mr. Martin here. Also he spent 22 years in Washington in the agricultural extension department. His home is now in Columbus.

Mrs. Ferguson, the lady speaker, when at home is on a farm in Morrow county, near Lexington. Said she is the mother of three children and has been in this institute work for ten years. She is an interesting talker and keeps her audience close with her. Amateur show story appeared in Thursday's Herald.

Thursday morning's session opened with a number by the Walnut township's school orchestra of some twenty members rendering a selection, Miss Roubush, Circleville, directing. Rev. Winterhoff, St. Paul, gave the invocation. The Duval, Madison, Ashville, and South Bloomfield grade schools all appeared in numbers of the two-day program and performed like veterans. Executive committee, Mrs. Sam Brinker, Mrs. Herb Cummins, Frank Wharton, Ray Swayer and Cecil Noecker.

The food, grain and potato show was a splendid success with many quality entries, the corn being especially strong. Ervin Yeoman assisted by D. W. Briggs, both of

OPEN LETTERS TO TOURNAMENT OFFICIALS

GENTLEMEN: The Pickaway county basketball tournament should be held in Circleville and should not be sectionalized. The present status of the tournament plan offers an opportunity to Circleville merchants and businessmen to aid in ironing out the difficulties. The Circleville Athletic club by a vote of its membership wants $200 for the use of the gymnasium, a cost of $40 nightly. Members of the county tournament committee refuse to pay more than $25 per night for the use of the gymnasium. The club officials say $40 a night is needed to meet expenses. Tournament officials say they believe $25 a night is a fair price considering the accommodations offered. There are good gymnasiums throughout the county that can be used for the games, but crowds cannot be accommodated. Both sides in the controversy seem determined to "stick" to their prices. Holding the tournament in Circleville brings business to the city on five nights. Merchants should not overlook this feature of the event. I believe a delegation of businessmen, backed by some organizations of the city, should meet with C. A. C. officials and those of the tournament to assist in working out a solution to the problem. Circleville should keep the tournament.

TO COUNTY INSTITUTES
COMMITTEES: Not in recent years have reports from the various township and village institutes been so interesting. Crowds attending the various gatherings have been large, home talent plays offered as features have been excellent, state speakers assigned to address the gatherings have been splendid, and agricultural and domestic displays have passed all others in recent history. The reasons for the success of these institutes are many, but one is predominant. That is the cooperation put forth by all connected with the organizations to put them over. Entire communities must get together, there must be a general feeling of fellowship before any institute can be a success, and, I am happy to say, that feeling must have prevailed this year because the annual functions have been outstanding.

CIRCUITEER.

TO SCOUT LEADERS
WORKERS: Interest shown in the annual district organization meeting this week speaks well for the future of Boy Scouting in Circleville and Pickaway county. Despite functions that took several hundred persons to other meetings during the evening, the attendance at the banquet was the best ever reported in the district. James I. Smith, Jr., is to be congratulated for accepting reelection as chairman of the district. He has done a good job, with aid of other officials and interested persons, and is familiar with the problems faced in the development of Boy Scout work. During the last year scouting took rapid forward steps in the county area, but much work is still left to be completed. There are hundreds of boys who deserve, and need, leadership. The foremost task of all officers of the district is to develop more Scouts. If they do that then the Scouts will fall in line. All district officials should strive for the organization of more troops. Congratulations go to Herman Hill for accepting appointment as head of the committee arranging the financial drive; to the Rev. Robert T. Kelsey for his handling of the district meeting, and to all others who had parts in the gathering.

CIRCUITEER.

TO PEDESTRIANS
FRRIENDS: Falls of several persons on icy streets in Circleville and other county towns in the last few days brings again the warning to Be Careful. Sidewalks and streets are dangerous; it is difficult for persons who exercise care to keep from falling once in a while. Wear the best footwear possible to prevent you from sliding; take your time; never start across the street in front of an automobile. This practice is dangerous enough at any time, but it is absolute folly to attempt when you are none too certain of your footing. Autoists must be as careful as possible when streets and highways are ice-covered because after their cars start to slide there is very little that they are able to do to prevent a smash-up. Service department officials and employees of the state highway department should not hesitate a minute in removing snow that piles in the roads to make travel treacherous.

CIRCUITEER.

TO HAROLD K. CLAYPOOL
CONGRESSMAN: Your many friends are pleased to note your appointment to several important committees in the house of representatives. Your assignment to the flood control board is one much-sought by your colleagues. Your constituents in Pickaway county are pleased especially to learn of this appointment because they are interested in flood control. Construction of a new road on Route 22, West of Circleville, is a much-needed step in an effort to remove all travel from the dangers of flood waters, but that road does nothing at all about saving corn crops that are washed under year after year in the fertile bottom land. Something should be done to control the waters of the Scioto and your appointment to the flood control committee may mean that sooner or later something definite will develop along this line. Your followers in Hocking and Perry counties, where mining is the leading industry, should be well represented in Washington with you on the house mine and mining committee. All World War veterans of the district are pleased to note that you will again serve on the committee that looks out for their benefits. I am sure that your part in the new congress will be an important one and I hope that all of your endeavors are favored by that fine feathered friend of all of ours, Dame Fortune.

World At A Glance

Congress does not take to the idea of a governmentally established and managed lottery to finance, in part, the District of Columbia—that is to say, Washington, the national capital.
The scheme was proposed by Lewis R. Perkins, attorney for an outfit known as the Society for Liquidation of the Public Debt. Perkins outlined it in a letter to Chairman Robert L. Doughton of the house of representatives' ways and means committee. Doughton has not said much about it yet, but Representative Ross A. Collins, who is chairman of a subcommittee on appropriations for the District, has referred to it as "the biggest fool suggestion I ever heard of." Comment by other lawmakers is in quite general agreement with him.
Insofar as Attorney Perkins' plan applies only to the District of Columbia it is of no more than local interest. However, the lottery method of raising cash for public purposes evidently appeals to a great many folk on a far larger than a merely local scale—perhaps on a national one. It has been urged frequently and is mentioned oftener and oftener—not by regular economists but by volunteer advisers on the subject of revenue sources. I would not wonder if, sooner or later, it might not begin to make some converts on Capital

Hill. These funny-money notions are pretty contagious.

NOT SO FOOLISH

I entirely concur in Congressman Collins' judgment that a governmentally established lottery would be wholly undesirable—in fact, a vicious influence.
But it is not exactly a "fool suggestion."
Government lotteries pay like sixty. I have lived in several countries where they have them and there is not any doubt that they are enormously profitable—to the government; not to the suckers who play them.
Representative Collins contends that legalization of that kind of gambling would be an encouragement to "numbers", horse-race-betting, roulette, games of chance of all sorts. He is mistaken, evidently never having seen the system in operation.
Where a government sets itself up as a gambling house proprietor, it is as hostile to any clandestine gambling as our treasury department is to tariff smuggling. It is furious at any attempt to infringe on its monopoly.
I have seen the system worked intensively in the Argentine Republic, where there is a government lottery. There also is another gambling concession farmed out privately to the Jockey Club—racing. Between these two set-ups governmental and governmentally authorized. Argentina is policed to a bee's knee. It is dangerous to conduct even a little social poker game there or a bridge evening.

Ditto other countries where restricted gambling is legalized for governmental profit. It is the rule in Latin America.
The game is fair, all right—gamblers are considered.
But socially speaking?
WINNERS ARE LOSERS
Lottery winners do not make much, anyway.
The grand prizes are substantial, but the tickets usually are split up among a multiplicity of holders; no individual winner gets more than enough for one good "bust".
Years ago, a certain Nicholas Mihanovich, won at Buenos Aires on a single grand ticket. He got a huge bunch of dough at that shot, invested it judiciously and now the multimillionaire Mihanovich Line controls shipping up and down the Plate, Panama and Paraguay rivers from Buenos Aires to Asuncion. That one lucky shot is the only one I ever heard of in connection with Latin American government lotteries.
But it has advertised them a billion dollars' worth.
I think it is a cheap way of making money for a government.

How to Protect Old In Winter Weather

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.
OLD PEOPLE are very sensitive to changes in atmospheric conditions. The regulation of bodily temperature is unbalanced. They no longer burn their food with the same steady flame. The blood supply to the skin is diminished and does not fluctuate with weather changes.
Winter is the bad time with them. Quetelet drew up a table of over 400,000 cases, which showed that the largest number of deaths in people over sixty occurs in the months of December, January and February. That is undoubtedly why they seek asylum in California and Florida. And if circumstances permit, a winter trip to a warm climate pays for itself in increased comfort and even preservation of life.
If that is impossible, every effort should be made to save old people from draughts and sudden changes of temperature. Flannel or woolen clothes may be worn three-fourths of the year. And the young members of the household may have to set aside a warmer room for the habitation of their elders.
Walking Necessary
This does not mean that the elders should be constantly pampered or that they should not get some fresh air and exercise. If an old man gives up his work and sits in a warm house, the lack of fresh air and exercise will cause many symptoms. A daily or twice-daily constitutional may need some persuasion but it pays dividends which even the object of the attentions will admit.

The best time for walking or other exercise is after breakfast, and short periods must be planned because the aged easily become fatigued. After luncheon, a stroll in the fresh air will ward off the feeling of stiffness and sleepiness.
No hard and fast rules can be laid down for the habits of the elderly. And that goes without saying because the elderly themselves put out the most insurmountable obstacles to outside interference.
About sleeping especially, no rules can be formulated. An eminent author of my acquaintance wrote me that he had solved the problem of growing old gracefully. In his office and his library he has had a couch installed, and whenever he feels like it, he takes a few minutes of "shut-eye". He says that is the best remedy for the afternoon let down.
They Do Sleep
The elderly complain that they get no sleep at all, but usually they are deceiving themselves. A physician friend of mine tells of a woman of seventy who told him she

DEATH AT THE MANOR
BY M. E. CORNE
RELEASED BY CENTRAL PRESS ASSOCIATION

CHAPTER THIRTY
IN ONE CORNER of the closet of the second room stood a tall wicker cabinet. It housed so many pairs of shoes I could hardly believe my eyes. Thirty pairs, I counted, and every one of them practically new! Some of them were not even soiled on the bottom! Lucky girl, I thought, and wondered if this were Daphne's room.
Although Mac's instructions had called for the investigation of closets only, I could not resist a hasty glance around the room, and here, over to the dressing table and the writing desk. On the blotter of the latter I discovered a letter.
It really was not a letter, just an unsigned note that lay open for everyone to read. The handwriting was bold and masculine. Shamelessly I read it:
Dear Daphne:
Meet me at ten o'clock at the Linden Tree. Tonight.
That was all, and so far as I could see there was not even an envelope. Of course there was a chance that it did not mean a thing. The note was not dated; the appointment might have been for an evening past. But I had a hunch that it was nothing of the kind. The paper was creased once through the middle, and the crease looked new and fresh, if you know what I mean. Right then and there I made my decision, wise or foolish. Come on, o'clock and there would be a third party to that date. And it would not be Mac McIntyre! Little Elsie, in person was going to carry on at the Linden Tree! Then we would see who had a brain or two in her head!
Well, I had wasted ten minutes playing Sherlock Holmes, so I wrote Daphne's name after my count of the shoes and went on about my business.
The third room's closet proved to be of masculine content. A powerful, though not unpleasant, odor of antiseptic rushed out to greet me when I opened the door. The odor came from a rumpled smock that hung by its collar to the back of the door. Mr. Horace's room, I deduced, feeling very professional indeed! And Mr. Horace owned ten pairs of shoes, neatly polished and neatly arranged on a shelf below his suits and coats.
So far I had not discovered anything sensational starting just shoes and more shoes, and one brief note of undecided importance. What Mac hoped to gain by my search was beyond me.
I hesitated a long time before entering the next apartment. Mac had not said anything about skipping this particular room, and so, with my heart in my mouth, I went inside. The shades were tightly drawn. I did my duty in double time and not until I was safely in the corridor did I permit myself so much as a tremble. Not that I believe in ghosts and such! But nevertheless the atmosphere of Mrs. Horace's bedroom had been a trifle too unearthly to suit my taste.
I had now reached the head of the front stairs leading upward to the third story. I made up my mind to visit the servants' quarters before tackling the remainder of those on the second floor.
The stair, though slightly narrower and darker, was a duplicate of that which ran from the first to the second story. I had reached, I think, the third or fourth step of the lower section when I heard a sound that stopped me. Someone was coming down from above—someone whose shoes squeaked!
An eternity passed before the owner of those shoes came into sight. With my eyes popping from my head I waited. I do not know what I expected to see—some sort of fire-eating monster, I guess—and I burst into helpless, hysterical laughter as a pair of razor-creased trousers followed by an immaculate gray waistcoat emerged from the gloom.

"Beg pardon, miss!" The monster paused beside me. It had a square, anxious face from which blue eyes peered worriedly into mine.
"Oh! Oh!" I could not stop laughing.
"Is there anything wrong, miss?"
I shook my head. With my hand to my mouth, I stifled my mirth. I took a deep breath. "Thought of something funny!" I gasped idiotically.
"Indeed, miss?" The blue eyes blinked in sudden alarm; the razor-creased trousers edged distantly from me. Why—the man thought I was silly. I swallowed convulsively. The corners of my mouth switched once or twice before I managed to regain complete control of myself.
I said coquettishly: "I haven't seen you around before."
"No?" He regarded me uncertainly.
"Do you belong in the house?"
"Not exactly, miss. I valet one of the gentlemen guests."
"Do you?" I smiled ravishingly, and sidled closer to him. Strange, this seemed to increase his fright; he moved as far as possible from me. "Mr. Jeffries, perhaps?"
"Count Orsini, miss."
"Oh, the foreign gentleman!" I was properly impressed. "Fancy valeting royalty!"
For the first time my monster smiled. "Royalty, if you'll excuse me, miss, is not all it's cracked up to be."
"No?" I eyed him reproachfully.
"You don't mean it! The count looks ever so generous."
"Humph!" The valet snorted. Evidently I had touched a sore spot. "Generous when it pleases him to be, miss, and that's a fact."
I made sympathetic noises. "I supposed gentlemen treated their valets as ladies treat their maids—you know—give them things, like clothes and shoes—"
"Not until they are all wore out, miss. That's why I was bowled over, so to speak, when he handed me a brand-new pair of shoes this morning—"
"Shoes?"
"Yes, miss." He glanced at his feet. "A perfect fit, too. I can't understand it!"
"Well!" It was all I could do to hold my voice to the casual note. "They do squeak a little—I daresay you noticed that?"
"Annoying, miss?"
"Oh, nothing to speak of—but you know how gentlemen are! If your count is one with nerves—"
"He has a nasty temper." The valet admitted. "Likely as not the

CIRCUITEER.

TO HAROLD K. CLAYPOOL

CONGRESSMAN: Your many friends are pleased to note your appointment to several important committees in the house of representatives. Your assignment to the flood control board is one much-sought by your colleagues. Your constituents in Pickaway county are pleased especially to learn of this appointment because they are interested in flood control. Constuction of a new road on Route 22, West of Circleville, is a much-needed step in an effort to remove all travel from the dangers of flood waters, but that road does nothing at all about saving corn crops that are washed under year after year in the fertile bottom land. Something should be done to control the waters of the Scioto and your appointment to the flood control committee may mean that sooner or later something definite will develop along this line. Your followers in Hocking and Perry counties, where mining is the leading industry, should be well represented in Washington with you on the house mine and mining committee. All World War veterans of the district are pleased to note that you will again serve on the committee that looks out for their benefits. I am sure that your part in the new congress will be an important one and I hope that all of your endeavors are favored by that fine feathered friend of all of ours, Dame Fortune.

CIRCUITEER.

World At A Glance

—By—
Charles P. Stewart

Congress does not take to the idea of a governmentally established and managed lottery to finance, in part, the District of Columbia—that is to say, Washington, the national capital.

The scheme was proposed by Lewis R. Perkins, attorney for an outfit known as the Society for Liquidation of the Public Debt. Perkins outlined it in a letter to Chairman Robert L. Doughton of the house of representatives' ways and means committee. Doughton has not said much about it yet, but Representative Ross A. Collins, who is chairman of a subcommittee on appropriations for the District, has referred to it as "the biggest fool suggestion I ever heard of." Comment by other lawmakers is in quite general agreement with him.

Insofar as Attorney Perkins' plan applies only to the District of Columbia it is of no more than local interest. However, the lottery method of raising cash for public purposes evidently appeals to a great many folk on a far larger than a merely local scale—perhaps on a national one. It has been urged frequently and is mentioned oftener and oftener—not by regular economists but by volunteer advisers on the subject of revenue sources. I would not wonder if, sooner or later, it might not begin to make some converts on Capital

Hill. These funny-money notions are pretty contagious.

NOT SO FOOLISH

I entirely concur in Congressman Collins' judgment that a governmentally managed lottery would be wholly undesirable—in fact, a vicious influence.

But it is not exactly a "fool suggestion." Government lotteries pay like sixty. I have lived in several countries where they have them and there is not any doubt that they are enormously profitable—to the government; not to the suckers who play them.

Representative Collins contends that legalization of that kind of gambling would be an encouragement to "numbers," horse-race-betting, roulette, games of chance of all sorts. He is mistaken, evidently never having seen the system in operation.

Where a government sets itself up as a gambling house proprietor, it is as hostile to any clandestine gambling as our treasury department is to tariff smuggling. It is furious at any attempt to infringe on its monopoly.

I have seen the system worked intensively in the Argentine Republic, where there is a government lottery. There also is another gambling concession farmed out privately to the Jockey Club—racing. Between these two set-ups governmental and governmentally authorized, Argentina is poised to a bee's knee. It is dangerous to conduct even a little social poker game there or a bridge evening.

Ditto other countries where restricted gambling is legalized for governmental profit. It is the rule in Latin America.

The game is fair, all right—gamblers are considered.

But socially speaking?

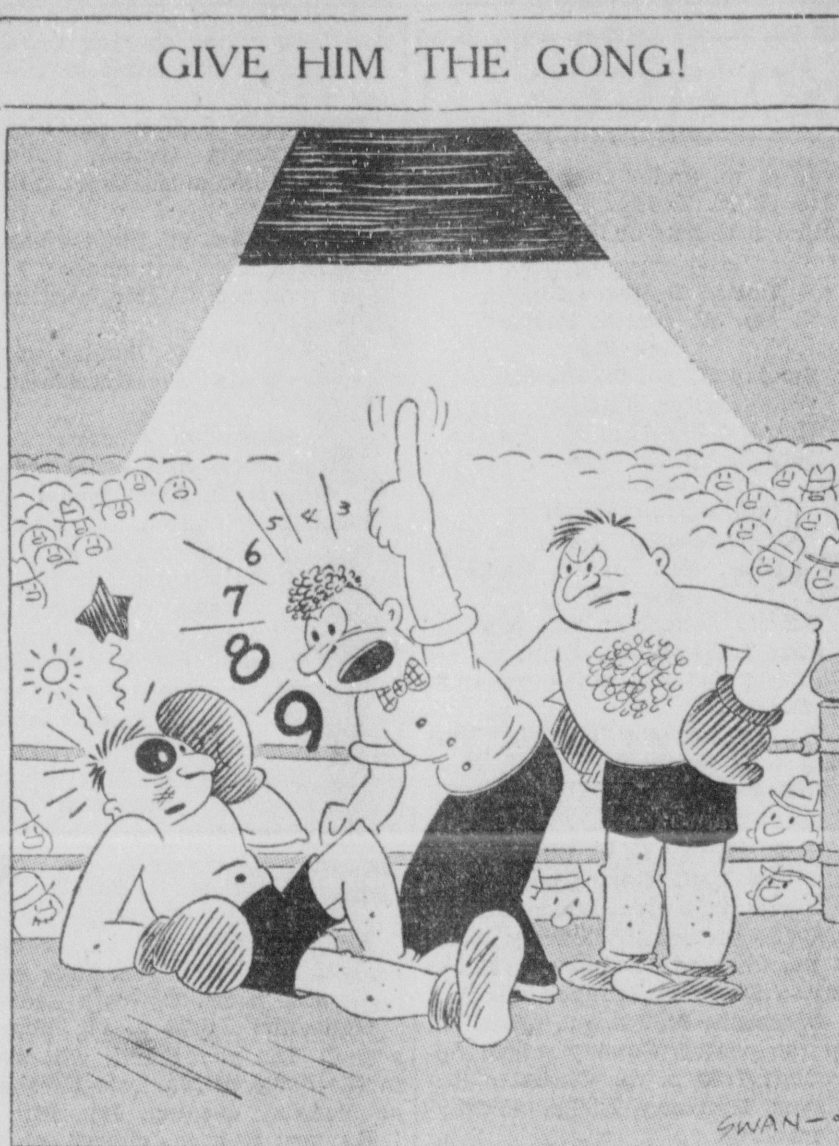

WINNERS ARE LOSERS
Lottery winners do not make much, anyway.

The grand prizes are substantial, but the tickets usually are split up among a multiplicity of holders; no individual winner gets more than enough for one good "bust".

Years ago, a certain Nicholas Mihanovich, won at Buenos Aires on a single grand ticket. He got a huge bunch of dough at that shot, invested it judiciously and now the multimillionaire Mihanovich Line controls shipping up and down the Plate, Panama and Paraguay rivers from Buenos Aires to Asuncion. That one lucky shot is the only one I ever heard of in connection with Latin American government lotteries.

But it has advertised them a billion dollars' worth.

I think it is a cheap way of making money for a government.

How to Protect Old In Winter Weather

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

OLD PEOPLE are very sensitive to changes in atmospheric conditions. The regulation of bodily temperature is unbalanced. They no longer burn their food with the same steady flame. The blood supply to the skin is diminished and does not fluctuate with weather changes.

Winter is the bad time with them. Quetelet drew up a table of over 400,000 cases, which showed that the largest number of deaths in people over sixty occurs in the months of December, January and February. That is undoubtedly why they seek asylum in California and Florida. And if circumstances permit, a winter trip to a warm climate pays for itself in increased comfort and even preservation of life.

If that is impossible, every effort should be made to save older people from draughts and sudden changes of temperature. Flannel or woolen clothes may be worn three-fourths of the year. And the young members of the household may have to set aside a warmer room for the habitation of their elders.

Walking Necessary

This does not mean that the elders should be constantly pampered or that they should not get some fresh air and exercise. If an old man gives up his work and sits in a warm house, the lack of fresh air and exercise will cause many symptoms. A daily or twice-daily constitutional may need some persuasion but it pays dividends which even the object of the attentions will admit.

The best time for walking or other exercise is after breakfast, and short periods must be planned because the aged easily become fatigued. After luncheon, a stroll in the fresh air will ward off the feeling of stiffness and sleepiness.

No hard and fast rules can be laid down for the habits of the elderly. And that goes without saying because the elderly themselves put out the most insurmountable obstacles to outside interference.

Not sleeping especially, no rules can be formulated. An eminent author of my acquaintance wrote me that he had solved the problem of growing old gracefully. In his office and his library he has had a couch installed, and whenever he feels like it, he takes a few minutes of "shut-eye." He says that the best remedy for the afternoon let down.

They Do Sleep

The elderly complain that they get no sleep at all, but usually they are deceiving themselves. A physician friend of mine tells of a woman of seventy who told him she

Here an important word of warning should be noted. The aged respond very badly to the hypnotic drugs—especially the ones that are now more widely used than ever before—I mean the barbiturates such as amytal, medinal, numbatal, etc. They are liable to produce delirium and restlessness rather than relaxation.

The best sleep-producers for the old are warm drinks, such as warm milk, Ovaltine, hot chocolate, or a glass of wine or beer.

The home care of the aged is a difficult and trying task. In a review of plans for old age security, a magazine not long ago stated that a home with the young people was the best. But there are objections. The elders are inclined to resent new modes of life, and think themselves neglected if no attention is paid to them. This is the basis of oikomania, the morbid state in which the natural love for those nearest is turned to hatred. The old people themselves have to do most to prevent this situation.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

D. H.: "(a) Can a first attack of asthma in a young person be cured, and how? (b) Which is the better way to have tonsils removed, surgically or by X-ray?"

Answer—The word "cured" is the catch in this question. Any attack of asthma can be relieved by sedatives, and the earlier, the easier. An attack in a chronic asthmatic is not as easy to relieve as a first attack. "Cured" is a big order. In a child asthma is usually due to food sensitivity and usually the child "outgrows" it. Many children are asthmatic up to about the age of 8 or 9 and then mysteriously their asthma leaves them. (b) In my opinion surgical removal is the better way for tonsils.

R. A.: "Is colitis caused by too much acid? I have been taking acid for spasms of the stomach and get colic." Would chewing gum daily help?"

Answer—Colitis is more likely to be caused by too little than too much acid. I presume you mean you have been taking hydrochloric acid. Chewing of gum seems a better treatment.

DEATH AT THE MANOR

BY M. E. CORNE

CHAPTER THIRTY

IN ONE CORNER of the closet of the second room stood a tall wicker cabinet. It housed so many pairs of shoes I could hardly believe my eyes. Thirty pairs, I counted, and every one of them practically new! Some of them were not even soiled on the bottom! Lucky girl, I thought, and wondered if this were Daphne's room.

Although Mac's instructions had called for the investigation of closets only, I could not resist a hasty glance around the room, and here, over to the dressing table and the writing desk. On the blotter of the latter I discovered a letter.

It really was not a letter, just an unsigned note that lay open for everyone to read. The handwriting was bold and masculine. Shamelessly I read it:

Dear Daphne:
Meet me at ten o'clock at the linden tree. Tonight.

That was all, and so far as I could see there was not even an envelope. Of course there was a chance that it did not mean a thing. The note was not dated; the appointment might have been for an evening past. But I had a hunch that it was nothing of the kind. The paper was creased once through the middle, and the crease looked new and fresh, if you know what I mean. Right then and there I made my decision, wise or foolish. Come ten o'clock and there would be a third party to that date, and it would not be Mac McIntyre! Little Elsie, in person, was going to carry on at the linden tree! Then we would see who had a brain or two in her head!

Well, I had wasted ten minutes playing Sherlock Holmes, so I wrote Daphne's name after my count of the shoes and went on about my business.

The third room's closet proved to be of masculine content. A powerful, though not unpleasant, odor of antiseptic rushed out to greet me when I opened the door. The odor came from a rumpled smock that hung by its collar to the back of the door. Mr. Horace's room, I deduced, feeling very professional indeed! And Mr. Horace owned ten pairs of shoes, neatly polished and neatly arranged on a shelf below his suits and coats.

So far I had not discovered anything sensationally startling. Just shoes and more shoes, and one brief note of undeciphered importance. What Mac hoped to gain by my search was beyond me.

I hesitated a long time before entering the next apartment. Mac had not said anything about skipping this particular room, and so, with my heart in my mouth, I went inside. The shades were tightly drawn. I did my duty in double time and not until I was safely in the corridor did I permit myself so much as a tremble. Not that I believe in ghosts and such! But nevertheless the atmosphere of Mrs. Horace's bedroom had been a trifle too unearthly to suit my taste.

I had now reached the head of the front stairs leading upward to the third story. I made up my mind to visit the servants' quarters before tackling the remainder of those on the second floor.

The stair, though slightly narrower and darker, was a duplicate of that which ran from the first to the second story. I had reached, I think, the third or fourth step of the lower section when I heard a sound that stopped me. Someone was coming down from above—someone whose shoes squeaked!

An eternity passed before the owner of those shoes came into sight. With my eyes popping from my head I waited. I do not know what I expected to see—some sort of fire-eating monster, I guess—and I burst into helpless, hysterical laughter as a pair of razor-creased trousers followed by an immaculate gray waistcoat emerged from the gloom.

With my hand to my mouth, I stifled my mirth.

"Beg pardon, miss!" The monster paused beside me. It had a square, anxious face from which blue eyes peered worriedly into mine.

"Oh! Oh!" I could not stop laughing. "Is there anything wrong, miss?"

I shook my head. With my hand to my mouth, I stifled my mirth. I took a deep breath. "Thought of something funny!" I gasped idly.

"Indeed, miss?" The blue eyes blinked in sudden alarm; the razor-creased trousers edged distantly from me. Why—the man thought I was silly. I swallowed convulsively. The corners of my mouth switched once or twice before I managed to regain complete control of myself.

I said coquettishly: "I haven't seen you around before."

"No?" He regarded me uncertainly.

"Do you belong in the house?"

"Not exactly, miss. I valet one of the gentlemen guests."

"Do you?" I smiled ravishingly, and sidled closer to him. Strangely, this seemed to increase his fright; he moved as far as possible from me. "Mr. Jeffries, perhaps?"

"Count Orsini, miss."

"Oh, the foreign gentleman?" I was properly impressed. "Fancy valeting royalty!"

For the first time my monster smiled. "Royalty, if you'll excuse me, miss, is not all it's cracked up to be."

"No?" I eyed him reproachfully. "You don't mean it! The count looks ever so generous."

"Humph!" The valet snorted. Evidently I had touched a sore spot. "Generous when it pleases him to be, miss, and that's a fact."

I made sympathetic noises. "I supposed gentlemen treated their valets as ladies treat their maids—you know—give them things, like clothes and shoes."

"Not until they are all wore out, miss. That's why I was bowled over, so to speak, when he handed me a brand-new pair of shoes this morning—"

"Shoes?"

"Yes, miss." He glanced at his feet. "A perfect fit, too. I can't understand it!"

"Well!" It was all I could do to hold my voice to the casual note. "They do squeak a little—I dare say you noticed that?"

"Annoying, miss?"

"Oh, nothing to speak of—but you know how gentlemen are! If your count is one with nerves—"

"He has a nasty temper," the valet admitted. "Likely as not he sneak bothered him—but a bit of grease on the soles will fix that."

"Really? Well, I must be getting on."

"Must you, miss?" He sounded regretful.

"I nodded. 'I have my work to do.'"

"Will I see you again, miss?" "Probably; I'll be around." I smiled my sweetest.

"What's your name, by the way?" I added as an afterthought. "Ludwig, miss. And yours?"

"Elsie."

"My mother's name was Elsie," he said mournfully, and my lips began to twitch again.

"So long, Ludwig," I said, and ran down the stairs. At the landing I glanced backward. Ludwig was staring after me, grinning fatuously. I had made a conquest! Impulsively I blew him a kiss.

Poor Ludwig! He would not be loving me long! Not after Mac McIntyre got hold of him!

In the housekeeper's dining room Mac and Phil were in the act of rising from the table. They looked smug and well fed. I hated them! I grabbed a roll from the table and gnawed furiously.

"Easy, girl!" cautioned Mac. "Remember your figure. I scorned to reply; my mouth was too full for the Count Orsini."

The detective patted his protruding stomach. "Best meal I ever ate, Elsie. Too bad your doctor put you on a diet!"

"There are other things in life besides food!" I retorted complacently. "Shoes, for example!"

"Shoes?" He registered mild astonishment. "Shoes?"

"Yes, shoes. Squeaky shoes!" "Elsie, you found them?"

"Of course," I said airily and bit into another roll. "When I detect, gentlemen, I detect."

"Well!" And the admiration in his voice was so gratifying that I found my ill humor vanishing. "Where are they?" he demanded eagerly.

"At the present moment they repose upon the feet of one Ludwig, valet to Count Orsini."

"Orsini!" he exclaimed, and I knew I had rung the bell. What ever he had been expecting, it was not this. "You're dead certain?"

"Dead! With my own ears I heard them; with my own eyes I saw them. The count presented them to Ludwig this morning."

"So! And let that be a lesson to you, McIntyre," he said ruefully. "It never pays to form theories in murder cases!"

"I—" I began when Mrs. Greely came into the room.

"The police have returned," she said, and we returned to the library.

30 GOLFING PROS, TWO AMATEURS IN 'FRISCO TILT

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 20—Thirty professionals, seeking $5,000 prize money, and two amateurs playing for love and glory of the game, entered the first round of match play today at Lakeside in the ninth annual National Match play open championship.

A second 18 hole round will be played this afternoon.

During the 36-hole qualifying test Lakeside's nine-year course record of 69, set by Harry Cooper of Chicago in 1930, was equalled seven times and smashed twice.

Cooper himself lowered the record to 65, six strokes under par, during the first 18-hole round.

Then along came Johnny Perelli, of Lake Tahoe, Cal., yesterday and duplicated the new mark, causing old timers of Lakeside who have taken great pride in their 6,500-yard course to wonder.

Perelli scored six birdies and parred the rest of the holes yesterday to get his 65. He was putting for birdies on all 18 holes.

Cooper scored a perfect 71 yesterday, for a total of 136. Perelli with a 74 on the first round, had 139, which tied Art Doering, Stanford university amateur. The other 32 qualifiers was Marvin "Bud" Ward, Olympia, Wash., with 145.

By nightfall the field of 32 will be cut to eight. Tomorrow two additional 18 rounds will boil the field down to the two finalists who will meet Sunday in the 36-hole match for the title.

30 GOLFING PROS, TWO AMATEURS IN 'FRISCO TILT

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 20—
Thirty professionals, seeking $5,000 prize money, and two amateurs playing for love and glory of the game, entered the first round of match play today at Lakeside in the ninth annual National Match play open championship.

A second 18 hole round will be played this afternoon.

During the 36-hole qualifying test Lakeside's nine-year course record of 69, set by Harry Cooper of Chicago in 1930, was equaled seven times and smashed twice.

Cooper himself lowered the record to 65, six strokes under par, during the first 18-hole round.

Then along came Johnny Perelli, of Lake Tahoe, Cal., yesterday and duplicated the new mark, causing old timers of Lakeside who have taken great pride in their 6,500-yard course to wonder.

Perelli scored six birdies and pared the rest of the holes yesterday to get his 65. He was putting for birdies on all 18 holes.

Cooper scored a perfect 71 yesterday, for a total of 136. Perelli with a 74 on the first round, had 139, which tied Art Doering, Stanford university amateur. The other amateur in the select circle of the 32 qualifiers was Marvin "Bud"
Ward, Olympia, Wash., with 145.

By nightfall the field of 32 will be cut to eight. Tomorrow two additional 18 rounds will boil the field down to the two finalists who will meet Sunday in the 36-hole match for the title.

BUDGE AHEAD AGAIN
CLEVELAND, Jan. 20—J. Donald Budge today led his professional tennis rival and touring partner, Ellsworth Vines, eight matches to four after winning in straight sets, 6-1, 6-4 in Cleveland's arena last night.

How To Relieve Misery of Your CHEST
COLD

If you are suffering from a miserable chest cold, try this: Massage throat, chest, and back with Vicks VapoRub at bedtime. Then spread a thick layer on chest and cover with warm cloth.
VapoRub goes right to work to bring relief—two ways at once.
(1) Direct through the skin like a poultice; (2) Direct to the irritated air-passages with its medicated vapors.

This poultice-vapor action loosens phlegm—clears air-passages—checks tendency to cough—relieves local congestion.
Often, by morning the worst of the cold is over.

TIGERS RETURN TO ACTION WITH CLARKSBURG 'S'

Circleville Tigers will not be in action on the C. A. C. court Friday evening, but they will swing out Saturday night against Bob Terhune's Clarksburg team. The game is scheduled at 8:15 on the C. A. C. court.

Clarksburg's team is headed by Joe Ater, but he has able support from several cagers, including Hammon and Templin as the out-standing.

Coach Roy Black is reluctant to change his varsity five especially since the same quintet has been in action in the last two victories. It is about certain that Davis and Smith will play forwards, Walters will be at center and Bumgarner and Bowsher at guards.

The reserves of the two schools will meet in a preliminary at 7:15. The county schedule lists several fast games tonight. On the 'sked' are Perry at Pickaway, Walnut at Scioto, New Holland at Darby, Muhlenberg at Jackson, Saltcreek at Washington and Ashville at Monroe.

TONY CANZONERI WINS IN DENVER FISTIC CONTEST

DENVER, Jan. 20—Gallant Tony Canzoneri, four-time former champion, believed he was ready today to reconquer the fistic worlds he once ruled following another slashing victory in his uphill battle toward a meeting with Henry Armstrong.

The bull-necked little Italian, former featherweight, lightweight and junior welterweight champion, gave an impressive display of ring craft born of 15 years of milling as he belted out a 10-round decision over Wally Hally, Los Angeles lightweight, in Denver last night. About 3,500 fans witnessed the show.

GALENTO CLUBS OUT BRESCIA IN INITIAL ROUND

"Beer Keg" Wants Joe Louis; Left To Body Proves Lethal Blow

By Lawton Carver

NEW YORK, Jan. 20—Two-ton Tony Galento, the human beer-keg, said today, after due deliberation, that he is convinced he will not belt out Joe Louis in three rounds as he had previously announced. Instead, he will do it in one.

Basking in the not inconsiderable glory that he and his fellowtownsmen at Orange, N. J., insist is his by virtue of his one-round knock-out over Jorge Brescia last night at Newark, Galento renewed his howls of defiance in the direction of all heavyweights in general, but Louis in particular.

"I knock these bums out as fast as they line 'em up, and all I want now

SCHACHT TAKEN FROM POSITION AS NEGOTIATOR

Walther Funk Becomes New Reichsbank Chief In Drastic Move

to have been called off. According to all indications, no further moves would be made pending further instruction and information from the German government.

Schacht, long known as a financial "wizard" in the complexities of money and exchange, came out of relative retirement to undertake the negotiations regarding refugee emigration from Germany.

Last month at the invitation of Montagu Norman, Bank of England head, Schacht went to London to launch the negotiations. A year ago he resigned as minister of economics, yielding it to Funk, who now succeeds him as well as Reichsbank chief.

Protested Young Plan

Today, furthermore, was not the first time that Schacht has quit the post of leadership of the Reichsbank. He did the same thing in 1930, in protest against the Young plan on German reparations.

Three years later, however, he returned to the bank and then began his struggle to assure Germany's "economic independence," employing such measures as financial and exchange control and large-scale economic barter.

What his political future will be in the face of today's announcement remains a matter of keen speculation, in financial as well as international diplomatic circles.

Revelation of Funk's accession to Schacht's Reichsbank post followed by one day a denial, issued by German Press Chief Otto Dietrich, of foreign reports of forthcoming drastic changes in the German cabinet. Regarding these reports Dietrich stated:

"I am authorized to declare here with that all the current rumors are without foundation."

Schacht's final act as Reichsbank president was to place in the hands of George Rublee Germany's final concessions on the international plan for emigration of refugees.

It was presumed, prior to today's announcement, that the concessions would be made public following the meeting which had been scheduled between Schacht and Rublee this morning. For the moment, however, even disclosure of how far Germany will go in cooperating with other nations on the refugee question remained in doubt.

Meanwhile, it was stated, thousands of trucks from Montmany and Aguilu are bringing up battalions of insurgent infantrymen for a final attack on Igualada.

Despite government denials, insurgent authorities insisted their troops were within three miles of Igualada, and were pouring artillery shells into its fortifications. A column of Moroccan troops, it was claimed, captured the coastal towns of Noudegaya, Lariera and Salomo.

The President quickly corrected his questioner and pointed out that the proposal actually was to deepen the harbor, improve the flying field, and build new barracks.

Members of congress, however, saw the proposed preparation of Guam as a naval base, as the wedge for an ultimate showdown between this country and Japan.

ECONOMY DRIVE TAKES SEVEN OFF STATE PAYROLL

Those discharged included Joseph G. Mason, Lima, landscape artist, $225 monthly; A. C. Nolan is a brother of John Nolan, Jefferson county Democratic political boss who was linked with the Shaw Transport Inc., liquor trucking scandal by a senate investigating committee.

At the same time Beightler announced receipt of a letter from the national highway research bureau in Washington advising him that a road beautification project on Route 18 near Medina had been awarded first prize in the nation. Beightler's own contracting firm, Spellhorn and Beightler, did the job.

U.S. to Open Plane Route Over Ocean

United States and France by March 15, or earlier.

May Take 24 Hours

The first schedules are expected to require from 20 to 24 hours as they will be flown in huge clipper ships of the seaplane type via the Azores to Marseilles, France.

But, International News Service learned, two huge 350-mile-an-hour land planes, designed to fly in very high altitudes away from storm areas are nearing completion for use in the trans-Atlantic service.

The stratosphere planes will carry an 80,000 pound commercial load, will be of the land plane type so that they can take off from New York and land in Paris, and are expected to double the flight speed of the types of commercial seaplane carriers now ready for use. These will be ready within a year or less.

The United States completed its surprise agreement with France for a trans-Atlantic line yesterday after Great Britain had threatened to start a line from England to Montreal, leaving out any port of call in the United States.

Routes Established

The tilt for trans-Atlantic air prestige between the United States and Great Britain developed from an original agreement between Pan-American Airways and Imperial Airways in 1935 under which the British obtained an agreement that both would begin simultaneously. The proposed route was from New York to Ireland, via Newfoundland, and would follow the Great Circle, which is the shortest air line to Europe, but would be used only in the summer because of the treacherous winter weather over the North Atlantic. In the winter the route would be via the Azores.

WILLIAMSPORT INSTITUTE TO OPEN NEXT MONDAY

The institute at Williamsport will be held in the school building Monday and Tuesday. Clarke Smith is president. A domestic exhibit and corn show will be held with an auction sale of the exhibits on Tuesday afternoon.

State speakers for the sessions are Mrs. D. B. Phillips, of Mt. Washington, O., and Thomas D. Phillips, of Ohio State university. Noon lunches will be served by the Parent Teacher association.

A play "No Men Admitted," a kitchen cabinet orchestra and other musical numbers will be featured of the Tuesday evening program. The program will be presented by the Sorosis club.

Other officers in addition to Mr. Smith are Earl Baker, vice president; Mrs. Robert Baird, secretary; Merrill Carman, treasurer; John Puffinberger, finance, and Mrs. George LeMay, hostess.

Last of the series of institutes will be held in Derby on Jan. 25 and 26.

According to the message relayed to Mackey radio by the American freighter, New Orleans, the tanker broke in two late Wednesday night after a battle of hours against the storm. Walther Funk Becomes New Reichsbank Chief In Drastic Move to have been called off. According to all indications, no further moves would be made pending further instruction and information from the German government.

Schacht, long known as a financial "wizard" in the complexities of money and exchange, came out of relative retirement to undertake the negotiations regarding refugee emigration from Germany.

Last month at the invitation of Montagu Norman, Bank of England head, Schacht went to London to launch the negotiations. A year ago he resigned as minister of economics, yielding it to Funk, who now succeeds him as well as Reichsbank chief.

Protested Young Plan

Today, furthermore, was not the first time that Schacht has quit the post of leadership of the Reichsbank. He did the same thing in 1930, in protest against the Young plan on German reparations.

Three years later, however, he returned to the bank and then began his struggle to assure Germany's "economic independence," employing such measures as financial and exchange control and large-scale economic barter.

What his political future will be in the face of today's announcement remains a matter of keen speculation, in financial as well as international diplomatic circles.

Revelation of Funk's accession to Schacht's Reichsbank post followed by one day a denial, issued by German Press Chief Otto Dietrich, of foreign reports of forthcoming drastic changes in the German cabinet. Regarding these reports Dietrich stated:
